

To whom it may concern,

I had the privilege of working alongside Dalton for about 2 years, where he worked first as a studio assistant and then as a director for our in-house video production team. In a very short amount of time, Dalton moved from being a “let’s see how this goes” situation, to a situation where he was having some of the biggest and best creative and productivity impacts of anyone on the team. He immediately brought a vigor, a passion, and an enthusiasm to our production work that no one else could match

He coupled that enthusiasm and vigor with intelligence. I’ve never seen someone study for their day job as much as Dalton did. He had a hunger to learn everything he could about his craft, and even things that reached far beyond what he would likely ever be asked to do. Dalton felt it his responsibility to always be prepared to accomplish any task put before him and he constantly worked at it.

Though Dalton came to our team with a very limited amount of experience in video production, he quickly became one of the more skilled members of our crew. He has a knack for learning highly technical pieces of equipment, technical skills, and technical concepts. If there was ever anything new that our crew had to take on and figure out, Dalton was always the one to lead the way and usually had everything figured out before we all came to work the next day.

Dalton had an insatiable drive for excellence. He would never willingly do a job halfway. He would always give 110% no matter what anybody said or actually required of him. Dalton has such a breadth of interests and skills that he is about as adaptable as you can imagine and he is eager to give in whatever way he can.

Dalton will make a great addition to any team he has the privilege of joining and I have no doubt that he will bring that same enthusiasm, effort and passion to anything he does.

Sincerely,
